Workshop Travel Handbook - Receipts

Original synthetic sample for the Azure IQ Workshop. This is not a real employer policy. Version 1.0. The sample contains two pages so learners can inspect extracted page ranges, Markdown tables, overlapping chunks and source attribution.

1. Standard claims. Submit a complete travel claim within 30 calendar days after the trip ends. A claim includes the business purpose, trip dates, cost center and the currency actually charged. Record one expense per line; do not combine meals, transport and lodging.

An itemized receipt is required for every hotel stay, airline ticket and rail ticket, regardless of amount. Meal receipts are required above USD 25. A card statement proves payment but does not replace an itemized hotel or meal receipt. Keep the original receipt until the claim has been approved and paid.

2. Review. The traveler checks the receipt date, vendor, amount, tax and currency before uploading. The manager checks the business purpose and any exception approval. Finance checks duplicate claims and policy limits. A returned claim must be corrected within 10 business days; the original trip end date remains the basis for the filing deadline.

3. Receipt checklist. The following table summarizes the standard requirements. These requirements are deliberately different by category, so a useful answer must identify the correct table row rather than infer one rule for every expense.

Expense category	Itemized receipt	Extra requirement
Hotel	Always required	Separate room, tax and meals
Airline or rail	Always required	Include ticket and itinerary
Meals	Required above USD 25	List attendees and purpose
Local taxi	Required above USD 15	Record start and destination

Workshop Travel Handbook - Exceptions

Original synthetic sample for the Azure IQ Workshop. Page 2 of 2. This page describes exceptions and the evidence required for them. It is not legal, tax or financial advice.

4. Missing receipts. First request a duplicate from the vendor. If the vendor cannot provide one, attach a missing-receipt declaration showing the date, vendor, amount, currency, business purpose and why a duplicate is unavailable. Attach proof of payment where available. A declaration does not automatically make an expense reimbursable.

The manager must approve each missing-receipt declaration before Finance reviews the claim. A hotel claim without an itemized bill additionally requires written Finance approval. These approvals are specific to the expense and do not waive the 30-calendar-day submission deadline from page 1. Never create or alter a receipt to support a claim.

5. Advance approval. Obtain written manager approval before booking a hotel above the workshop cap of USD 180 per night, excluding tax. Attach the approval to the claim. Approval must state the city, dates, nightly rate and business reason. Verbal approval does not replace this record. Finance reviews any lodging exception before payment.

6. Personal items. Remove personal purchases, minibar charges and companion travel from the claim. If a hotel bill includes business and personal expenses, itemize them and claim only the business portion. Retain the full original bill so the reviewer can reconcile the submitted amount with the total charged.

7. Worked example. A traveler returns on March 2, submits on March 20 and claims a USD 32 meal, a USD 12 taxi and a hotel stay. The meal needs an itemized receipt because it is above USD 25; the taxi is below its receipt threshold, but still needs the route and business purpose. The hotel always needs an itemized bill. The claim is within 30 calendar days. Retrieval should cite both the checklist and any relevant exception.
